AIRE Industrial invests in manufacturing technology to build flexible spill response and fluid containment products.

Meridian, ID (July 6, 2009) AIRE Industrial purchases custom Miller Weldmaster Corp.'s 112 Extreme, the next generation in heat sealing technology.

"I am thrilled about making this investment for our future. The 112 Extreme hot air welder will provide us a larger breadth of production capabilities while allowing easier equipment operation" said Tim Lewis, AIRE Industrial Business Development Director. "The new Miller Weldmaster machine has precise welding tolerances and was added to take our secondary containment production to the next level of efficiency."

The new machinery will help AIRE Industrial to perfect its fuel storage tanks, water storage tanks and spill containment berms while giving them the capability of expanding into the sign, tarp, and even tent industry.

"In today's tough economic times, it is critical to keep up with the technology that will allow us run a lean and more efficient operation. Using the 112 Extreme, conservative time savings right now are in the 50% to 60% range and getting better every day we use the new machinery" according to Greg Ramp, President of AIRE, Inc.

AIRE Industrial continues to produce the highest quality, while providing the best value and backing them with stellar customer service. Through continued investment, AIRE Industrial continues to be a business on the move upward.

"AIRE Industrial consistently bucks the economic trend and shows consistent double digit growth through this tough financial time, we look forward to the future and expansion of our capabilities" said Dan Allumbaugh, AIRE General Manger. "We are proud to make this investment in our future".
